

WHY IS A TANGO RAT? MISS MARJORIE MAUDE SAYS SHE DOESN'T KNOW

Her Maid Denies Positively She Ever Owned a One-Stepping Rodent.

Why is a Tango Rat?
And if so, can it?
No, not can the rat, but can it tango?
The origin of these questions lies in a telephone message to The Evening World to-day to the effect that the Tango Rat belonging to Miss Marjorie Maude, the daughter of Cyril Maude, English actor, had escaped from her rooms in the Vanderbilt Hotel and was running about the corridors of that exclusive caravansary, to the consternation of everybody in the house.

Although it was known that Miss Maude is about to enter vaudeville and therefore might have engaged the services of a press agent, a reporter investigated the story. As none of the hotel employees had the slightest idea of any such event taking place within their stately precincts the reporter made bold to visit Miss Maude's suite.
Miss Maude was absent, but her maid came to the door.
At the very mention of the word "rat" she appeared ready to faint. By degrees the purpose of the reporter's visit was made to filtrate through her consciousness and she succeeded in convincing the reporter that Miss Maude had not a Tango Rat, that Miss Maude simply hates rats of any kind, even the kind that once adorned the locks of all fashionable females, and that she hadn't seen a rat or even a mouse since she had been in the Vanderbilt.
But that doesn't answer the vital question. Is there such a thing as a Tango rat? Has any one ever seen one? Perhaps Prof. Phifer, creator of the Banana Hound, will oblige.
